Barkley For President

The recent declaration of Vice President Alben W. Barkley that he will become an active candidate for the Democratic nomination for president of the United States is well timed. Mr. Barkley waited until it appeared that the Eighty-second Congress had completed its work. There was every reason to believe that the Senate would adjourn sine die last Saturday. Instead, a filibuster broke out and the Vice President presided until the late hours of the following morning.

The Democratic state convention in Kentucky on May 27 had formally instructed its delegates to support Mr. Barkley for president of the United States. At that time he said that he was not actively seeking the nomination but would accept it if it were tendered to him. Since then other candidates have continued actively and aggressively to pursue their candidacies, and they will do so at the Chicago convention.

Mr. Barkley will go as a delegate, and there is no doubt as to the effect it will have upon the convention if he should be asked to address it before the nominations are made.

As the time for the convention approaches, it appears more and more certain that Barkley can unite any discordant elements in the Democratic party better than any other prospective nominee. His position on all public matters is already known and he is thoroughly familiar with the status, the legislative history, the Supreme Court rulings and the administrative policies that have developed in regard to every major issue that faces the United States. Other candidates have floundered on these, but the position that Vice President Barkley has taken is based upon the record of the party which he helped to write as the Democratic floor leader in the United States Senate. His position corresponds closely to what a Democratic platform is likely to contain.

In 1932, at the national convention in Chicago at which Franklin D. Roosevelt was nominated for president, Mr. Barkley was the keynote speaker. He again was the keynote speaker in 1936. He then was the permanent chairman of the Democratic national convention in Chicago in 1940. In 1944 he presented Franklin D. Roosevelt in nomination for the presidency. In 1948, at the Philadelphia convention, he was again the keynoter. There he declared that the claim of the Democratic party upon the confidence of the people rested upon a consistent, constructive and far-sighted record of devotion to their welfare.

The question of Vice President Barkley's age often is raised. Certainly he is as active physically as Mr. Taft and Gen. MacArthur would be, and he is one of the Democrats who has not drawn the line in any way against opposing Gen. Eisenhower. He is ready and willing. The burdens of the presidential office are great, but no man understands any better than Vice President Barkley the duties of that office.

One of the greatest strains upon the president is, of course, trying to inform himself about the many public matters that come to his desk. These things Vice President Barkley would already know, having served in the Congress since the days of Woodrow Wilson. He has served on the Security Council, which has dealt with developing the policy of defense. He has been the president of the American delegation to the Interparliamentary Union for the past four years. As floor leader of the United States Senate, he wrote or shaped or helped to pass the farm program, social security and other progressive legislation. He knows where he stands. He has spoken in political campaigns in every state in the union. He is probably better acquainted with public sentiment out in the country than any other spokesman.

There are now 50 Democrats and 46 Republicans in the United States Senate. Thirty-four members of the Senate will be chosen this year. It is freely predicted by members of this body, including some of those who are candidates this year, that if Vice President Barkley is nominated as the head of the Democratic ticket, the number of Democratic members of the Senate elected will be nearer 60 than 50. The entire House of Representatives will be chosen, and the same thing holds true in connection with that branch of Congress.

No question is raised as to the ability of other aspirants, but they have factional or sectional handicaps, that might make it difficult for them to be nominated or to win in November.

The decision of Vice President Barkley to make an active race for the nomination is a calculated willingness to serve the people in the highest office of trust, with a full recognition of the hardships and sacrifices and complete knowledge of the duties and the responsibilities.

Is This Progress?

A recent tabulation of church membership in the United States, made by the National Council of Churches of Christ, showed a total of 93,631,878 Americans enrolled as church members.

This means that approximately sixty per cent of our population carries at least nominal membership in some church, with almost forty per cent not affiliated with any church.

Broken down, Jewish churches have increased membership from 4,091,242 to 5,000,000 since 1926.

Roman Catholic churches have increased from 18,605,003 to 28,634,878 during the same period.

Protestant churches have grown from 36,000,000 to 60,000,000.

Increase in the Jewish churches was approximately twenty-two and one-half per cent; in the Roman Catholic churches approximately sixty per cent and in the Protestant churches approximately seventy per cent.

These are healthy increases in all churches. But do the figures show real progress?

Any one who looks at it can see that only about sixty per cent of all the people in this country are affiliated with some church. What of the other forty per cent? All of them are not children. And what about a large percentage of those affiliated with some church who do little about it?

Our own thought is that many of the churches are overlooking real opportunities while they go out of their way to do things which do not increase membership. When pastors, in their sermons, point out this or that "weak spot" in some other denomination, they do not aid the cause of religion.

We believe that the Church is God-made; we do not agree that denominations are. And our thought is that ministers of the gospel—of any denomination—who devote their time to denouncing other faiths, are not aiding in the spread of the Gospel.

If they devoted the same time and energy to attempting to reach people who are not affiliated with any church, they might get somewhere. Pointing out things they believe wrong with other churches does not build up confidence in any church.

Do It Yourself

Lazy, inactive chickens don't "do so well." But the man who learned to dangle ear corn and cowbells over their heads to make them jump for their treats solved not only a poultry problem. He also gave us a fairly logical cure for some human ills. Seems that lots of us loiter around, waiting for good schools to pop up in our midst; for someone else to spoon-feed our children their religion and morals; for our governmental problems to be solved by Divine guidance. And we don't "do so well."

Let's try jumping for the things we want, scratching around for our own food, thinking about our own problems, and then doing, ourselves, the things our community needs to get done. Working for what we want isn't too far-fetched, is it? After all, we're extremely lucky. We have corn on the string here in America. All we need do is jump for it.

Mrs. T. A. Ladd, of Sandlick road, says that her fishing trip Friday with Sgt. and Mrs. Jack Rodman and children is her fourth of the season. Her catch also totals four. "Maybe you think that doesn't try your faith," she declares. Now, Mrs. Ladd, I'm willing to bet a few fishermen around here would try even that if faith could be bought.

Kate Kirkman, youngest daughter of Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Kirkman, Franklin street, looked at an X-ray picture, which showed the bones of her mother's face, and said, "Mother, why didn't you smile?"

I said in this column recently that John E. Hillyard's record for not having missed Sunday School in 32 and a half years was probably the best in the county. However, since then, I learned that Mrs. Catherine McConnell, Hopkinsville street, has not missed attending Sunday School in the last 38 years. Is there somebody else who can claim to a better record?

"For Men Only"

Though we so-called civilized people long ago gave up many of the taboos that separated men and women, it is not difficult for some of our oldsters to recall several taboos that were still very much alive a half century and less ago. These customs had been in vogue so long that no one knew their origin and few questioned them. To many people they seemed like the Mosaic Law or the laws of the Medes and Persians, "which alter not." In a single generation a number of these taboos have fallen rightly or wrongly, and even some of the older people now wonder why such customs persisted down into our own time.

A few days ago I went to get a haircut. It did not seem at all unusual, and it isn't, that several young women came in with their small boys to get the youngsters dressed up for a summer Bible school that was about to begin. No one, least of all the women, seemed aware by the barber shop itself; everybody acted as naturally as he would have if he had gone to a grocery or to a church. But it was not too long ago that a woman hardly dared to enter a barber shop, when the sacred precincts were for men and men only. It was even thought pretty daring to let a small boy enter such a place unattended by an older brother or his father. The talk was likely to be very masculine, far too strong for small boys' ears.

I remember how offended a barber got some years ago because one of his elderly customers forgot that ladies now were to be found in this eminently masculine institution; it seems that the old man, the very image and picture of before-the-war Southerners, had used some rather strong man language while a lady was overseeing the haircutting of her small boy. The old man probably resented the intrusion of women into man's sanctuary, anyway, and did not especially care if he did utter some words that no lady of other times had ever heard. I fear I would be hard-pressed if I tried to explain to a student under forty the taboo attached to women's entering any such manly place as a barbershop.

It is almost impossible to over-emphasize the importance to the Republican Party of the nomination of General Dwight D. Eisenhower to be their standard bearer in the November elections.

It is not the man himself nor the issues on which he battled and won early decisions in the Republican Convention last week as much as it is the fact that a completely new element has taken command.

This is demonstrated in Kentucky by the fact that a young vigorous representative, Triston Morton, from Louisville, alone officially fought the old guard of the GOP.

That same fight was duplicated in Louisiana, in Georgia, in Texas and any number of other states. It means that a new, young, vigorous and progressive element now has command of the Republican Party. It spells the end of the reactionary isolationist element.

This is of great importance not just to the Republican Party, but to the nation. For too long the American people have been offered virtually nothing by the GOP. There is at least some promise in the turn of events in Chicago which gives reason to hope we'll have a constructive minority party with intelligent, up to day views, instead of what we've had for the past 20 years.

Mr. Eisenhower was only the man around whom the younger element rallied. He is not necessarily a great progressive, nor an unbeatable candidate. But the younger element proved itself the wisest, politically, by out-maneuvering the Taft forces at every turn.

Politics being what it is, the most able politicians sooner or later are bound to take command of a political party.

There is left in the Republican party only a dissident and small, very small, minority of isolationism and old-guardism.

This has urgent meaning to the Democrats who gather here next week. It means that their always restless coalition of minority groups, banded together by the late President Franklin Roosevelt in a troubled majority, must iron out its differences and be more constructive, more progressive, more positive—or face the spectre of defeat in November.

The Democrats right now should realize that they face a different kind of campaign entirely than they have fought the past few elections. Dwight David Eisenhower won the Republican nomination because he conducted a positive, aggressive campaign. On the contrary, Senator Taft's campaign was negative. When his steamroller was stopped cold, the Taft drive turned into a stop-Eisenhower fight. This is purely negative, and it was negated by the Convention.

Next—the Democrats!

Washington Letter

(By Jane Eads)

Washington — Miss Mildred English, a Georgia schoolteacher who speaks German with a Southern accent, brings back an encouraging picture of progress in the democratic education of youth in Western Germany.

For the past 16 months Dr. English, on leave as professor of education at the Georgia State College for Women, has helped plan and supervise educational activities in the American zone in Germany preparatory to turning them over to the German people under the recently-signed peace contract. She also worked with educators in the British and French zones.

Part of her work was to expand the program of educational service centers in more than a dozen German cities. She had helped set these up under the sponsorship of the American military government in Germany from May, 1946 to May, 1948. These centers serve as lending libraries and study places and provide educational films and equipment as well as meeting places for workshops for parents and teachers. Miss English also helped Berlin women form an association for cultural exchange and aided in a program to make kindergartens in Germany a part of the public school system.

"Our chief concern has been the university student and youth of that age that grew up under Hitler, and with the young teacher groups whose education and training was interrupted by the war," Dr. English said. As a result of the educational work carried on in occupied Germany, she said, many organizations are planning to turn over to the German people under the recently-signed peace contract. She also worked with educators in the British and French zones.

"We feel confident our educational projects influenced this direction and they will carry forth the ideals we teach them," Dr. English said. Most of the youths who grew up under Hitler, she said, see hope in the democratic life and are encouraged by American willingness to give them a chance at it.

Dr. English has returned to Georgia State College for Women at Milledgeville. She describes herself as a "Southern at-large," since she was born in New Bern, Tenn., was a superintendent of schools in North Carolina, for 11 years and brothers living in Texas.

She collects children's books from all corners of the world and boasts a copy of Red Riding Hood in modern Greek.

Proteins are found in all living cells.

A good example of the growing industrialization and economic progress of the South is this new DuPont synthetic fiber plant at Camden, South Carolina.

MUSIC to Southern ears! The hum of busy factories, crowded stores and streets. The ring of saw and hammer. And more than 26 million telephone calls a day!

There's another cheerful sound—58,000 Southern Bell men and women busy providing you and your neighbors with the most and the best telephone service in Dixie's history. Service that's vital to the Nation's defense. Service that keeps you in touch with others 24 hours a day... speeding your business... enriching your home life.

TELEPHONE growth is a striking example of progress in today's amazing South. During the 10 years from 1940 to 1950, the South's growth in telephones was more than twelve times its growth in population. In the first 6 months of 1952 alone, we added 149,250 new telephones. ## Conservation District News

By Oliver C. Allcock
(Soil Conservation Service)

County Judge William G. Pickens has proclaimed the week of July 17-23 as Soil Conservation Week in Caldwell county. The proclamation is found in this issue of the Leader. Similar proclamations have been made in other counties in the state.

Governor Lawrence Wetherby has proclaimed the week of July 17-23 as Soil Conservation Week in the state of Kentucky.

Soil Conservation District No. 1 will be observed in Caldwell county and in Kentucky the week of July 20-27.

The purpose in observing the week is to call attention to the importance of conserving our soil and water resources.

Conservators of 116 soil conservation districts in Kentucky have varied activities for the week. Among these are field demonstrations, tours, stewardship messages to churches, conservation programs for civic groups, and displays in windows and others.

The first soil conservation district in Kentucky was established in 1911.

County Agent's Column

By R. A. Mabry

The big question among many of the farmers of this county now is what will be used for hay this winter. Even if we have good rains the rest of the year the hay supply will be very short; however, with rains beginning soon much of the Korean lespedeza will recover and make some hay. Fescue also might make enough growth for some hay if pastures were not too short, but most farmers have enough livestock to keep the grass eaten off as it grows.

Some farmers are seeding black soybeans or Sudan grass now, hoping that there will be enough growth to make some hay.

The best solution to helping lighten the need for hay would be to concentrate on seeding of Balbo Rye, Forked Deer Oats, or Kenbar Barley in September. Early September seeding should give growth for fall and winter.

IRRIGATE FARM

James Mashburn and Lee Mashburn have purchased and put into operation a portable sprinkler irrigation unit on their farm in the Otter Pond community this week. Irrigation was started on a 12 acre field of corn July 9. The source of water was a large pond.

The Mashburns were anxious to get the irrigation started, as the crops were suffering for moisture. Although some sections of the county have had some relief from one or two rains, the Otter Pond section has not had enough rain to settle the dust since early spring.

Lee Mashburn said it was good to see the idle water in the pond being put to work to bring relief to the crops.

This is the first farm irrigation unit to be installed in Caldwell county and in this section of the state. A number of friends and neighbors have been stopping at the Mashburn farm to see the irrigation equipment in operation.

Ky. Farm News

Ten new silos are being built by dairymen in Taylor county. A bumper crop of fescue seed was harvested in Calloway county in June.

During the past year, Harrison county homemakers had a month by month exhibit in a Cynthiana store window showing prospects for the year.

Spraying with DDT has been recommended by University of Kentucky entomologists for locust borers which are killing about 45 trees on the farm of Joe Hardin.

These seedlings can be made after disking lightly and drilling the seed or disking once lightly and broadcasting the seed then cross disking lightly the second time. Ammonium nitrate applied at the rate of 50 to 100 pounds per acre will help give new seedlings a good early start, providing more fall and winter growth for pasture.

FUSARIUM WILT

Tobacco having Fusarium Wilt is being confused with Black Shank by some growers. Fusarium Wilt attacks only one side of the plant at first withering and turning the leaves yellow on that side and eventually killing the whole plant. Black Shank withers and kills the whole plant at once. The stem of plants affected with Black Shank will turn black from the roots to a little above ground level.

I would like to know anyone suspecting they have black shank on their farm.

COW AND CALF SHOW

I would like to again call attention to members of the Artificial Breeding Association that the Artificial Sired Cow and Calf show has been combined with the county fair this year. Showing your calves will help to show the public results of the Artificial Breeding program.

FARM NEWS

THE GARDEN

By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics

A NUMBER OF THINGS

Judging by letters from gardeners, beans this year have suffered from more unpleasantness than all the other vegetables combined.

Root Rot and Hollow Stem — Although a real disease may be involved, generally these conditions are found on only the first plantings made before the soil was warm enough. Later plantings of beans in the same rows do well. Incidentally, the bugs found about the faulty bean stalks are not to blame; they are merely scavengers, nature's "clean-up-men," friendly folk.

Dwarf Plants — Especially when home-saved seed has been used, plants here and there are observed to stand still, with their leaves ruffled. This is a disease, mosaic, that accumulates when home-saved seed is done, because so often the seed is saved from the latest plants. Seed should be saved from the best, earliest plants. Mosaic is spread by fleabeetles and leafhoppers. Spraying with Methoxychlor (Marlate) stops both completely, and increases yield and earliness, too.

Twisted Vines — No less than four letters have come, telling of thickened vines and twisted vines, with no blooms sticking. Only one sample came, and this gave every indication of having wick in Pluaski county. Extension of milk routes is helping develop whole milk production in Jackson county.

About 75 per cent of the wheat grown in Todd county is the Vigo variety, crops of 25 to 28 bushels being grown on corn land, and 46 bushels on tobacco land.

The Middlesboro Kiwanis Club is encouraging pasture development in Bell county.

Outbreaks of wildfire in tobacco followed rainstorms in early June in Whitley county.

The Greenup County Farm Bureau sponsored a county-wide program to vaccinate dogs for rabies.

Identical twin Brown Swiss calves were born this spring on Homeplace farm in Perry county.

For the first time in many years, Monroe county farmers are saving orchard grass seed in large quantities.

Mrs. George Horton of Elliott county picked 180 gallons or nearly 27 crates of strawberries from an eighth of an acre.

Forty-six dairy heifers were brought in from Wisconsin for 25 members of 4-H clubs in Hart county.

Store window exhibits were used in Campbell county to show the various projects carried in homemakers clubs.

Spray demonstrations to control weeds and giant foxtail were put on in Webster county.

Charles Roberts, of Pulaski county, cut a heavy hay crop from a field that had been in alfalfa five years.

Where control measures had not been taken, the leaf roller damaged apple trees in Kenton county.

There are now five broiler houses in Green county with a total capacity of 25,000 chickens.

Membership of homemakers clubs in Graves county now totals around 550 women.

Grading Eggs Adds To Poultry Income

Selling graded eggs is one way poultry raisers can increase their incomes. That fact is established received the "drift" from nearby fields sprayed with weedkiller. Such beans are doomed.

Other similar complaints about tomatoes have come, and it seems wise to issue a general warning about staying far away from the garden with weedkiller, as vegetables all are broad-leaved plants.

A sprayer that has even the odor of weed-killer left in it is decidedly unsafe to use in a garden. If fields adjacent to a garden must be sprayed to kill weeds, a time should be chosen when the wind is blowing away from the garden, or even a slight breeze blows away from the garden.

Bad Stands — This applies more particularly to lima beans, whose seed is extra vulnerable to mildewing and rotting in the soil. Dusting with Spergon or with any 6 per cent copper dust prevents the seed until it can sprout; then it is past danger.

in a new bulletin of the University of Kentucky Experiment Station.

In 1944 a graded-egg program was set up in Kentucky and U. S. official standards of quality eggs from producers. A survey showed that farmers who graded eggs got an average of 6 cents a dozen more. Producers netted about $1.50 an hour for special handling and cleaning of eggs for sale on the graded market.

Producers who supported the graded buying program reduced the number of No. 2 eggs by separating dirty and stained eggs or by cleaning them; made regular deliveries and nearly eliminated eggs of C quality; made some effort to increase the proportion of large eggs, and emphasized fall returns to producers.

egg production. As a result of the graded purchase program, buyers received twice as many grade A eggs and only one-sixth as many dirty, stained and low-quality eggs as were found in current receipts. Furthermore 53 per cent of graded volume was delivered in the last half of the year as compared to 25 per cent in the current receipts market.

"From the standpoint of development of a quality egg marketing program the results of graded buying were gratifying," said John B. Roberts, author of the bulletin. "A sustained graded-egg purchase program will lead to improvement in egg quality, reduce loss in spoilage and increase returns to producers."

Kentucky Lags In College Enrollment

This disclosure was made by the State Department of Education in a study made by Miss Louise Combs, of the division of Teacher Education and Certification. The study showed that Kentucky had 114 persons for each 10,000 enrolled in college last year, while the national average is 165.

"The only state where college enrollment was so low was Maine,"

No tugging and straining—no ropes or levers—you simply use the Finger Tip Control of your FERGUSON TRACTOR to lift or lower the disc, right from the tractor seat, without stopping or backing. You make short easy turns, without strain on you or your tractor.

You get the penetration you need for working tough, hard soils. You chew down heavy weeds, stalks or cover crops—mixing vegetation into the soil to reduce water run-off and erosion. You can work newly cleared fields or stony land, or work down brush. The heavy, heat-treated alloy disc blades will stand the gaff.

Kentucky Behind In Civil Defense

Kentucky is falling far short of recruiting the number of ground observers it will need for Civil Defense if the state is put on 24-hour air-watch duty as most of the surrounding states are, Gilbert L. White, State Deputy Civil Defense director, announces.

To date, only 2,800 persons in Kentucky are working as aircraft spotters or in filter centers, he reported. Major Gerald I. Blumenthal, State coordinator of the Ground Observer Corps for the Air Force, has estimated that 43,000 volunteers will be needed. Of the number, 40,000 will be needed in observer posts and the remainder will be needed in the filter centers in Louisville and Lexington.

Under the observer program, approximately 400 posts will be located throughout the state and will be manned by about 100 persons each.

The observers—all civilian volunteers—will spot aircraft and send information by telephone to the filter centers where it will be relayed to the Air Force and Army. Operating on a 24-hour basis with two persons working at a time, 100 observers will have to put in less than four hours a week.

Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia, Virginia and Illinois were included in 27 states that were put on a full-time observer basis Monday of this week, and Blumenthal expressed concern that Kentucky might be called on for the same duty before the state is ready.

"The Air Force has emphasized that 'Operation Skywatch'—the operation putting these states under full duty—is not an exercise. It is actually a defense measure," Blumenthal said.

"Russia is reported to be able at the present to put a large number of bombers in the air capable of attacking us with atomic or conventional bombs. Our radar screen is not effective under 5,000 feet, and ground observers are needed to complement defense means."

Blumenthal said that he has supervisors now and 136 have enough personnel to carry on part-time operations.

Rocklick Road

(By Mrs. T. A. Ladd)
A little bit like rain Monday morning. Anyway, we have a good rain in time for a small portion of our dry fields and lawns that haven't seen a drop of moisture since the Fourth at Kentucky Lake fishing and picnicking.

Mike Ladd spent last week with Jim Parsley at Parsley's camp on Kentucky Lake. Sgt. and Mrs. Jack Rodman and children are spending a few weeks with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Tilford Ladd.

I saw Vernon Taylor across the road at Howard Pickering's the other morning, digging around in Howard's tobacco. He wanted to see if there was any moisture there. His was all gone.

Mallie and Bill Morse, Melvin Poe and Mrs. T. A. Ladd spent the Fourth at Kentucky Lake fishing and picnicking.

Mr. and Mrs. Eual French, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Ladd, Mrs. Neil Ladd and Mike spent a weekend on Kentucky Lake fishing and

Joe Conway, of the U. S. Air Force, has concluded a leave with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Conway. He is stationed at Houston, Texas, but soon will be transferred to Amarillo, Texas.

Misses Fairy and Henry Emma Carney, of Clay, were in town Wednesday afternoon visiting friends.

Rev. W. M. Griffin and J. E. Hillyard attended Synods United Promotion committee meeting at Danville Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Buddy Fox and son, Gary, of Detroit, spent a few days last week with her mother, Mrs. Ambie Fuller.

Suggestions Given In Selecting Toys For A Sick Child

(By David Taylor Marke)
When your child has been ill and is convalescing, toys are as important to him as they are when he is well.

Your choice of toys, says Professor Grace Langdon of Columbia University's Teachers College and counselor to the American Toy Institute, may be as important a factor in your child's recovery as much as other care he requires.

Here are some basic suggestions for selecting toys suitable for making convalescent days happy, according to Dr. Langdon:

Choose toys that will encourage your child to play quietly without much expenditure of physical energy.

Provide a wide variety of toys because the convalescent's span of attention is short; your child will need to turn from one type of activity to another more frequently than when he is well.

Consider bed limitations realistically; avoid play materials that spill easily and toys that have small pieces which, if lost in the bed clothes, will spoil the fun.

Choose playthings that do not require too long focusing of the eyes, since eye-strain should be avoided.

Select toys the child can play with alone or with one other person, since more companionship is likely to become over-stimulating.

Dr. Langdon suggests the following types of toys for convalescent-time play:

Dolls and stuffed animals that give companionship.

Picture books and drawing books—easy ones chosen to fit the child's interests.

Paint sets—when the bedding is covered and a flat surface provided for painting.

Crayons, paper and drawing board.

Poison Ivy Called Vacation Spoiler

By W. L. Cash, M. D.
(Medical Consultant)
The best way to combat one of nature's chief vacation spoilers—poison ivy—is to stay away from that three-leaved plant, technically known as Rhus radicans.

However, if exposed to poison ivy or poison oak (which, like poison ivy causes an itching, burning, blistering rash often accompanied by swelling) it is wise to bathe with a strong laundry where," Cunningham said.

The hobby attracts fans of all kinds. A doctor, an electrical engineer, a nurse, a housewife, a secretary, a business executive and a barber are among the members of the Chicago Lapidary Club. They discuss the merits of petrified wood from Eden Valley, Wyo., for example, with equal interest.

soap. It is important not to touch tools or clothes that have been in contact with the plant. The sap can even be carried on soot from burning plants and by dogs and cats.

To determine treatment for poison ivy it is best to get the advice of your physician.

To rid premises of poison ivy and poison oak plants, spray with a solution of 2,4-D or other weed killer available from hardware or general stores. Two or three applications usually are necessary to kill the plant entirely. Salt and kerosene may be used but they are less effective.

When driver safety tests were offered in New York recently, 12,000 persons took the tests.

Baseball Becomes A Cold Business

(By Frank Eck)

New York — Baseball owners make more mistakes than the people who each day lose an estimated million dollars betting on horses.

The magnates fire managers with reckless abandon, giving the stock excuse "we need a change." They never give the real reason, which in each case this season would be: "The team is losing, and a losing team loses fans."

That's exactly what happened in Boston when the Braves let Tommy Holmes go, what happened in St. Louis when Bill Veeck fired Rogers Hornsby and what occurred in Philadelphia when Bob Carpenter gave the gate to Eddie Sawyer. And last place Detroit did the same thing to Red Rolfe.

Baseball today is more commercial than ever. It's cold business.

The Phillies fired Sawyer after a recent Friday night game, making it almost impossible for the change to get a good play in the papers. His successor, Steve O'Neill, is as pleasant a manager as anyone would want to play for. Yet, "Stout Steve" had been fired in Detroit, Cleveland and Boston.

In 1947, Phillie owner Bob Carpenter fired Ben Chapman and still hasn't given a reason. Chapman, now a Cincinnati coach, is still waiting for an answer; so is the public.

Managers aren't the only ones affected, of course. Don Lenhardt, a journeyman outfielder now with Detroit, is an example of how a hero sometimes is treated in the majors.

On June 2 Lenhardt hit a 10th inning home run with the bases loaded. It was a game for the Boston Red Sox. That night he was traded to Detroit in a package deal of nine players. "Lenhardt's home run almost held up the deal," said one Boston official. The accent, of course, is on "almost."

Willard Marshall had won a couple of games for the Braves with his spring hitting. Yet, when Charley Grimm came in as manager, Marshall was shipped to Cincinnati. Today he is one of the league's leading hitters.

The topper of all happened just before the 1950 World Series. Tommy Henrich of the Yankees was injured but still eligible for the Series. When the National Guard took Curt Simmons, the Phillies asked for a replacement in the Series. General Manager George Weiss of the Yankees saw his chance for a fast one. He would let the Phillies have Jack Mayo for the Series if Johnny Hopp could replace Henrich. It was something the commissioner, Happy Chandler, should have disallowed.

And it was one of the biggest mistakes Sawyer ever made. Mayo was of little use to the Phillies but Hopp, as a first-base replacement for sluggish Johnny Mize, came up with some dazzling stops in late innings to help save the first two Series games. The Yankees swept four straight.

George Kell, recently traded by Detroit to the Red Sox, is considered the best third baseman in the American League. Yet because the Tigers were in last place they traded Kell to Boston. Kell was the last person to learn of the trade.

On Memorial Day, Tommy Holmes had breakfast in Brooklyn with Boston General Manager John Quinn. The Braves lost two close games. The next morning, before Holmes and the Braves had reached Cincinnati, there was a message waiting for Holmes. It said: "Call John Quinn in New York."

Holmes thought a deal had been made. It was a deal. Holmes learned that he had been replaced by Charley Grimm. The Braves only hired Holmes as manager in an effort to spur attendance. He was the most popular player ever to captain in Braves Field. But it didn't work. The Braves' rookies were not ready to deliver winning ball and the fans stayed away.

Take the case of the New York Giants. They were going nowhere under likeable Mel Ott. When Owner Horace Stoneham had a chance to get a more forceful pilot he brought in Leo Durocher. The attendance faded but when the Giants began winning the crowds perked up. Ott hung around for 1 1/2 years with a front-office job only because he had a long-term contract.

Once in a great while there's sentiment in baseball. The time Larry MacPhail punched sports writer Arthur (Red) Patterson in the nose at Ebbets Field—where everything happens. After MacPhail went to the Yankees he hired Patterson, now the best public relations man in baseball. But even at that, Patterson still insists the MacPhail punch was not sentimental.

Calvert City Defeats Fredonia Club 2-1

Calvert City's Pittsburgh Metallurgical team escaped with a 2-1 decision at Fredonia Sunday over an improved Fredonia club that just wouldn't quit.

It was a pitchers' duel between Boisteur and Bell.

A misjudged flyball, two walks and an error gave Calvert the two runs in the seventh inning that spelled the ball game.

Prior to that time, Fredonia had grabbed a one-run lead in the opening frame and clung tenaciously to it.

The victory kept Calvert City's lead in the Eastern division intact and also kept the Fredonia club in third place in the standings.

Only extra-base hit of the day was a triple by Bill Young, Calvert second-baseman.

Score by innings:

Calvert City . . . 000 000 200—2 4
Fredonia . . . 100 000 000—1 2 4

Bell and Culp; Boisteur and Fralich.

ANIMALS HIS FRIENDS

Portland, Me. — (AP) — Every week is Be Kind to Animals Week for Adolph B. (Junior) Bowens. And the feeling is mutual on the part of the animals.

"Junior" has hauled skunks from tin cans and flushed 'em out of culverts without any odorous consequences. He has walked up to a bristling porcupine and tied a rope around its neck and led it away. He has worked for the animal Refuge League since he graduated from high school three years ago.

He has turned his mother's turkey-farm home into a virtual menagerie. He keeps a raccoon, a pair of gray squirrels, a goat, a woodchuck, two dogs and two cats.

"I've been crazy about animals ever since I was big enough to walk," he said. "If people understood them there'd be no need for fear."

John Kastan who scored 15 touchdowns last season for Boston U. is now a member of the New York grid Giants.

Paul Blachoff, co-captain of the West Virginia football team, is also president of the school's student body.

The largest attendance at Cincinnati Reds' opening was 35,747 in 1924 when the defeated the Pirates, 5-3.
